Jim Squier is announcing on his website (yes, it's now up and it looks pretty good!) that his campaign has raised $150,000 in 40 days. At the end of September (according to the FEC filings) he'd raised $19,000. days of fundraising.</blockquote>A $150,000 war chest would catch him up with where Sekula-Gibbs and, Olson were on 9/30. It would put him slightly ahead of where Hrbacek was moneywise. However, we have to assume all three of those candidates have continued to fundraise since 9/30 as well. The next reports will be through 12/31/07

UPDATE: Website now up here. Judge Squier still doesn't have a campaign website. He does have a Wikipedia page. But it's pretty sparse -- not even a bio. Maybe he's just modest? Jim -- March is getting close and Republicans are trying to pick a fav now! Playing hard to get (or find) probably isn't a good idea at this point.And really, Jim, you have a lot going for you as a Republican candidate. First, you're hated by the left. Except the lefty Houaton Press who had this to say about you in their "best of" issue from 2004:<blockquote>Best Civil Court JudgeJames D. Squier, 312th District Court Family courtroom legal bravos can be especially vicious.
But Judge James Squier, who got his start coaching in Pasadena's school district, has seen it all. He's paid his dues during a solid decade on the bench, alongwith 20 years of practice as an attorney (six of them as an associate judge). Squier came aboard in the most embattled of times for family courts: his patient, common-sense approach, good humor and -- above all -- fairness deserve much of the credit for restoring credibility to Houston family courts. His added duties as administrative judge speak volumes about the respect Squier has earned, from both colleagues and those appearing before him in court. There's no doubt about it: This ex-coach has excelled in the toughest of leagues.</blockquote>In addition, your strong Christian values made at least one Houston Chronicle columnist squeamish.Other than that, it's hard to track down some solid info on you, Jim. If anyone out there knows how to contact Jim's campaign, please share. Want to know where Nick Lampson stands on the issues?So does Project Vote Smart-- a completely independent, bi-partisan effort supported by key national leaders of both major parties including: John McCain, Republican Senator I Geraldine Ferraro, Former Democratic Congresswoman; Michael Dukakis, Former Democratic Governor; Bill Frenzel, Former Republican Congressman; and more than 100 news organizations throughout the nation. Their aim is to make it easy for average Joe schmo citizens to be able to figure out where a candidate for office stands on issue important to them.But Tricky Nick has repeatedly refused to provide any responses to citizens on issues through the 2006 National Political Courage Test. Why? Could it be that he doesn't want to put anything in writing that could be compared to his liberal historical voting record from 1996? He did respond back then and his answers are on-line for your perusal here (scroll down a bit).Pay particular attention to his stands on spending. In 1996 Nick wanted to increase spending, fees and taxes on just about everything but defense, which he would "greatly decrease."Want to have some fun? Call Nick at 281-488-4922 and ask them why he won't take the Political Courage Test for 2006. Let us know by posting here what they have to say.Keep following the money....PVS does have an up-to-date and comprehensive snapshot on where Nick's money is coming from, On September 14 of this year, President Bush signed a new bill into law that he said marked progress towards strengthening ethical standards that govern lobbying activities.<sup>#8221</sup> Did it?On the very day that Bush signed the bill into law, a number of top lobbyists sent out an invitation for a fundraiser luncheon for Pete Olson.According to the article in Harper's magazine:The fundraiser was held at the Independence Avenue townhouse of Williams & Jensen, a top lobbying firm whose clients include a number of big energy and pharmaceutical firms, as well as the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. The lobbyists hosting the affair included Greg Laughlin, a former congressman, John Runyan, who is a lobbyist for International Paper, and Jeff Munk, who previously helped raise money for DeLay.<img alt='BLOGGERS PHOTO ID_51364418400913906' style='float: left; MARGIN: 0px 10px 10px 0px; CURSOR: hand' src='http://bp1.blogger.com/_hdUcCf1TeBY/R0hQxnpBjFI/AAAAAAAAACI/QzmeNDz-JDc/s1600-h/Barbara+Bonfiglio.jpg' border='0' />Williams & Jensen is where Barbara Bonfiglio worked when she was the assistant treasurer or treasurer for many troubled PACs and charities run by politicians -- including Tom DeLay's infamous ARMPAC.We're not saying Olson did anything illegal by having that fundraiser. And, the fundraiser may also have been perfectly "ethical" as defined by the Washington establishment. But we have a feeling the voters in CD22 are likely to find this kind of information more than a little unsettling. The last thing we need is another DeLay wannabe or even someone who smells like a DeLay clone here. That's likely why, in spite of raising so much money, Olson is having a hard time getting any real support locally.None of the other candidates running for the GOP nomination, even including Sekula Gibbs, have taken the kind of money Olson has from special interest groups and groups outside CD22. Look for voters to cast their ballots for a candidate that's actually been around the district in the last 20 years and whom they know. Despite some early buzz on the guy, we're not sure, at this point, that Olson will be able to make the run-off.P.S. a hat tip to Greg in Pearland for the heads up on this.

    of all the GOP candidates seeking to unseat Lamson, three have so far emerged at the top of the heap: Hrbacek, Olson and Sekula-Gibbs. Of those three, Olson and Sekula-Gibbs raised more money initially, but Hrbacek is picking up the grassroots support. In terms of vote getting in the GOP primary, those are coveted endorsements -- mainly because the precinct chairs will go out and "work" their precinct for you. The NRCC is reporting:<blockquote>Former Sugar Land Mayor Dean Hrbacek (R), running for Congress in the solidly Republican 22nd district, last week claimed the endorsements of more than 40 GOP precinct chairmen in Fort Bend County.</blockquote>Rumors are that some recent polling shows Olson not getting much traction in the district despite some high-profile endorsements including one from former Senator (and boss) Phil Gramm. The fact that Olson only moved to the district a few months ago and almost all his money is coming from K Street may be turning the party faithful off. We'll have to see.Shelley leads the crowded GOP slate at this point (most pundits put her in a runoff paired with a yet-to-be-determined #2) because of her relatively high name i.d. We're not so sure. Her campaign staff is secretly worried about her high negatives (over 50%) in her own polls. Don't count Shelley out, however. She's a smart woman and may be underestimated by her competition.In the meantime, Robert Talton still has time to get organized. He has good conservative credentials but... can he raise the money to compete?In addition, it's not too late for another horse to join the race. A late entry or two in December could change the dynamics yet again. It's still way too early to say how this will look come March. Here's the story.House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (and a contributor to Nick Lampson's campaign) has moved to kill an amendment that would protect employers from federal lawsuits for requiring their workers to speak English. Among the employers targeted by such lawsuits: the Salvation Army.Sen. Lamar Alexander, a moderate Republican from Tennessee, proposed the amendment that caused some very heated debate on the floor of the House. It was punctuated by this exchange when Hispanic Caucus members threw a hissy fit:<blockquote>Majority Leader Steny Hoyer, a moderate from Maryland, was beside himself. Congressional Quarterly reports that he jabbed his finger on the House floor at Joe Baca, the California Democrat who chairs the Hispanic Caucus, and yelled,"How dare you destroy this party? This will be the worst loss in 10 years."</blockquote>As John Fund rightly points out:<blockquote>The battle over Mr.

Alexander's amendment is about whether a consensus that used to unite liberals and conservatives in this country can continue to hold. If it can't, expect the issue to become a flashpoint in the 2008 elections. Republicans have their political problems with Hispanics over some of their approaches to illegal immigration, but they may be nothing compared to the problems Democrats have if they continue to cave in to their anti-assimilation extremists.</blockquote>We'll keep an eye on this to see where Tricky Nick Lampson falls. In the meantime, it's an issue the CD22 GOP candidates may want to latch on to.

href='http://houstconconsigliere.blogspot.com/2007/11/lampson-laments.html'>War-time Consigliere  has a similar take on this piece. (Except his last graph is hopelessly wrong.)The Houston Chronicle has a "look Nick's really a moderate" spin piece  today by Michelle Mittelstadt out of their Washington Bureau who is not usually this gullible.What's really happening here is Queen Nancy Pelosi is a pragmatist. She knows the 42 Dem "majority makers", like Lampson, got swept into office in 2006 from traditionally conservative (and GOP) districts. So, she's given those boys a "wink and a nod" to allow them to occasionally stray from the fold when one of two things is going to happen: 1) The Dems don't have enough votes to pass the measure anyway or 2) It's a measure they don't really care that much about anyway.
Pelosi is providing some political cover.Then, these Dems can trot back home (or in his case over to the home paper's bureau writer) and spin a tale about how "I'm not going to be afraid to go against the party." It's their only hope of surviving in 2008. It might play somewhere else. But not in CD22.On the votes that really count, and that CD22 voters care about, Tricky Nick was solidly with the libs -- where he's most comfortable.Let's not be fooled. The man has a fairly solid liberal voting record in the House. He had an 85% lifetime rating from Americans for Democratic Action, a left-wing group, and a 21% lifetime rating from the American Conservative Union. That's not Ted Kennedy liberal, but it's pretty far from conservative or even moderate. Lampson may be decent at pretending to be middle-of-the-road, but when push comes to shove he's the kind of guy who falls in with the party line.Need more? Let's not forget who some of Nick's biggest money supporters have been: screenwriter and producer Norman Lear - founder of the far-left People for the American Way - actor and director Rob Reiner, Barbara Streisand. Also, Move-on.org has coughed up $168,000 to help him get elected and stay there.
